申し送りと 挨拶：報連相

End of Shift — Handover and Greetings to Staff — Scenario Dialogue

Can-do: Close your shift properly: greet the staff coming on, report what changed, pass on a message, invite them to ask you anything, and leave with the two set phrases every Japanese workplace expects.

1 · Dialogue & Why — 会話

Hana (caregiver)

お疲れ様です。申し送りを お願いします。

Thanks for your work. Let me hand over to you.

Why: お疲れ様です is how staff greet each other at work — not こんにちは. Say it every time you pass a colleague. It means roughly 'I see you are working'. Note the direction: ～です to someone starting, ～でした to someone finishing.

Suzuki-san (night staff)

はい、よろしく お願いします。

Yes — go ahead, thank you.

Why: よろしく お願いします (Ep 10) works before the work as well as after it. Here it means 'please go ahead, I am listening'. If you learn only two workplace phrases, learn this one and お疲れ様です.

Hana (caregiver)

田中さんですが、今日は お元気でした。

About Tanaka-san — she was in good spirits today.

Why: 「～さんですが」 (Ep 10) opens a report: it puts the resident up as the topic and warns the listener that news is coming. Start with the good news when there is some — the night staff will work twelve hours on what you tell them now.

Hana (caregiver)

でも、夕方に 少し 咳が 出ました。

But she coughed a little in the early evening.

Why: This is 報告 — the report, the first of 報連相. 咳が 出る is the natural way to say a cough happened; it is not something she did on purpose. Say WHEN it happened (夕方): a change with no time on it cannot be tracked by the next shift.

Suzuki-san (night staff)

そうですか。看護師さんには 伝えましたか。

I see. Did you tell the nurse?

Why: Expect this question every time you report a change. The nurse is the medical decision-maker, so the first thing the next shift needs to know is whether she has already heard. 伝えましたか = 'did you pass it on?'

Hana (caregiver)

はい。佐藤さんに 報告して あります。

Yes. I've already reported it to Sato-san.

Why: ～して あります means it is done and the result still stands — exactly what a handover needs. Name the person you told (佐藤さん), never just 'the nurse': the next shift may need to ask her, and a report with no name in it is one nobody can follow up.

Suzuki-san (night staff)

承知しました。夜も 気を つけて 見ますね。

Understood. I'll keep an eye on her tonight too.

Why: 承知しました (Ep 10) is the workplace 'understood' — warmer than わかりました when you are accepting a job. 気を つけて 見ます = 'I will watch carefully'. When you are the one receiving a handover, say this: the day staff need to hear that it landed.

Hana (caregiver)

それから、ご家族から お電話が ありました。

Also, there was a phone call from the family.

Why: This is 連絡 — contact, the second of 報連相. A message is not yours to keep until tomorrow: pass it on within the same shift. それから is the small word that opens a second item, so the listener knows you are not finished.

Suzuki-san (night staff)

ありがとうございます。連絡ノートを 確認します。

Thank you. I'll check the communication notebook.

Why: 連絡ノート is the shared notebook every facility keeps; the spoken handover and the written record must agree. 確認します = 'I will check' — a useful verb all day: 確認して きますね before you answer something you are not sure of.

Hana (caregiver)

分からない ことが あったら、いつでも 相談してくださいね。

If anything is unclear, please ask me any time.

Why: This is 相談 — consult, the third of 報連相. ～たら is 'if / when', so it opens a door rather than giving an order. Asking early is the cheapest thing in care work.

Hana (caregiver)

では、お先に 失礼します。お疲れ様でした。

Well then, I'll be off. Thank you for your work.

Why: The two phrases that end a shift. お先に 失礼します — 'excuse me for leaving before you' — is said by the person going home, and お疲れ様でした, now in the past tense, to those who stay. Leaving without them is the one thing colleagues really do notice.
