感染対策（かんせんたいさく）：手洗（てあら）いから

Infection Control — Hands Before and After, and Isolating Without Alarm — Scenario Dialogue

Can-do: Care for a resident who has a cough and a fever: wash your hands first, put on a mask and gloves and say why, offer rest in his room instead of announcing isolation, then wash again, disinfect, and report.

1 · Dialogue & Why — 会話

Hana (caregiver)

山田（やまだ）さん、咳（せき）が 出（で）ていますね。

Yamada-san, you've got a cough.

Why: Name what you notice, calmly and out loud. A cough you pretend not to hear is one nobody reports — and he knows you heard it.

Yamada-san (resident)

ええ。少（すこ）し 熱（ねつ）も あります。

Yes. I have a slight fever too.

Why: Cough plus fever is the pair that changes how you work today. Everything Hana does next follows from this one sentence.

Hana (caregiver)

まず 手洗（てあら）いを します。

First, I'll wash my hands.

Why: THE RULE OF THIS EPISODE, first half. Hands carry illness from room to room faster than anything else in a facility. Wash before you touch him — every resident, every time.

Hana (caregiver)

マスクと 手袋（てぶくろ）を つけますね。

I'll put on a mask and gloves.

Why: Say it before you do it. A caregiver who suddenly appears masked looks like someone who is afraid of him — one sentence turns it into ordinary care.

Yamada-san (resident)

私（わたし）は 病気（びょうき）ですか。

Am I ill?

Why: The mask made him worried. This is the moment that decides whether he tells you about the next symptom or hides it.

Hana (caregiver)

大丈夫（だいじょうぶ）ですよ。感染（かんせん）を ふせぐためです。

It's all right. It's to stop infection.

Why: Reassure first, then give the reason. 〜ためです explains the mask as protection for everyone — not a verdict on him. Diagnosing is the nurse's job, never yours.

Hana (caregiver)

今日(きょう)は お部屋(へや)で 休(やす)みましょうか。

Shall we have you rest in your room today?

Why: This is isolation, offered as rest. Keeping him out of the dining room protects everyone else, and asking it as a question keeps it care rather than a punishment.

Yamada-san (resident)

食事(しょくじ)は どう なりますか。

What happens about my meals?

Why: A practical worry, and a fair one. Answer it straight away and concretely — a vague answer makes the room feel like a cell.

Hana (caregiver)

お部屋(へや)に 持(も)って 来(き)ますね。

I'll bring them to your room.

Why: Short and certain. He is not losing his meal, only the walk to the dining room.

Hana (caregiver)

窓(まど)を 少(すこ)し 開(あ)けて、換気(かんき)しますね。

I'll open the window a little to air the room.

Why: Fresh air thins out what a cough leaves hanging in a closed room. Open a little and check he is warm enough — an older body chills fast.

Yamada-san (resident)

ありがとう。気持(きも)ちが いいです。

Thank you. That feels nice.

Why: Your confirmation the air is welcome, not cold. If he pulls the blanket up instead, close the window a little.

Hana (caregiver)

手袋(てぶくろ)を 外(はず)して、もう一度(いちど) 手洗(てあら)いします。

Gloves off, then I wash my hands again.

Why: THE RULE, second half. Taking gloves off is exactly when hands get dirty. Wash after, every time — gloves protect the hands, they do not clean them.

Hana (caregiver)

テーブルと ドアを 消毒(しょうどく)しますね。

I'll wipe the table and the door with disinfectant.

Why: Whatever many hands touch carries the most: door handles, the table, the bed rail. Wipe them before you leave the room, not at the end of the shift.

Hana (caregiver)

熱(ねつ)と 咳(せき)の ことは、すぐ 報告(ほうこく)します。

I'll report the fever and the cough straight away.

Why: Fever plus cough is reported the same hour, not saved for handover. The nurse decides what it is — and whether other residents need watching too.

Yamada-san (resident)

よろしく お願(ねが)いします。

Thank you — I'm counting on you.

Why: He is handing the worry over to you. That trust is what the reassurance earlier bought.

Hana (caregiver)

また 様子(ようす)を 見(み)に 来(き)ますね。

I'll come back to see how you are.

Why: A resident resting alone sees fewer faces all day. Saying you will come back is what keeps the room from feeling like a punishment.
