徘徊：一緒に 歩く

Wandering — Walk With Her, Never Block the Door — Scenario Dialogue

Can-do: Meet a resident heading for the exit at dusk: greet her instead of blocking her, ask where she is going, walk beside her, listen to the reason she gives, turn the walk around with a warm offer, and report it to the shift.

1 · Dialogue & Why — 会話

Hana (caregiver)

こんばんは。どこへ 行きますか。

Good evening. Where are you going?

Why: Greet her first, then ask. A greeting says you are walking with her; standing in the doorway says you are stopping her, and she will push past it.

Tanaka-san (resident)

家に 帰ります。

I'm going home.

Why: To her this is simply true. Arguing with it costs you the next ten minutes and gains nothing — her feeling is real even when the facts have moved on.

Hana (caregiver)

そうですか。一緒に 歩きましょうか。

I see. Shall we walk together?

Why: THE RULE OF THIS EPISODE. You cannot talk someone out of walking, so walk with her. Beside her you can watch her feet, the weather and the traffic — in the doorway you can only argue.

Tanaka-san (resident)

子どもが 待っています。

My child is waiting for me.

Why: The reason behind the walking. Nobody wanders for no reason — hear the reason and you have something to talk about all the way down the corridor.

Hana (caregiver)

大丈夫ですよ。お話を 聞かせてください。

It's all right. Tell me about them.

Why: Reassure, then invite the story. Asking about the child turns the walk into a conversation, and a conversation is the only redirection that does not feel like being handled.

Tanaka-san (resident)

むかし、この 道を よく 歩きました。

I used to walk along this road often.

Why: She has moved from the door to a memory, and that is the walk turning around on its own. Stay in the memory with her a little longer.

Hana (caregiver)

そうですか。ゆっくり 歩(ある)きましょう。

Did you? Let's walk slowly.

Why: Slow down the pace on purpose. A hurried walk at dusk is how a fall happens, and a slower one gives the conversation time to do the work.

Hana (caregiver)

寒(さむ)いですね。お茶(ちゃ)を 飲(の)みませんか。

It's cold. Won't you have some tea?

Why: Offer something better than the door. 〜ませんか is an invitation she can accept without losing face — and going indoors becomes her decision, not your instruction.

Tanaka-san (resident)

そうね。少(すこ)し 疲(つか)れました。

Yes... I'm a little tired.

Why: The opening you were waiting for. Take it at once — this is the moment she can turn back without it feeling like defeat.

Hana (caregiver)

では、お部屋(へや)に 戻(もど)りましょう。

Then let's go back to your room.

Why: 〜ましょう, walking beside her, hands free. Never take her arm to steer her — a resident led back by the elbow remembers being held, and tomorrow she will head for the door sooner.

Hana (caregiver)

私(わたし)が そばに いますね。

I'll be right here beside you.

Why: 見守(みまも)り — watchful supervision — is the care plan for wandering, and this sentence is what it sounds like. Staying close is allowed; locking a door is not.

Tanaka-san (resident)

ありがとう。安心(あんしん)しました。

Thank you. That's a relief.

Why: She came to the door frightened of being late for someone. Walking with her is what turned that into relief — nothing you said corrected her.

Hana (caregiver)

今日(きょう)の ことは、すぐ 報告(ほうこく)します。

I'll report what happened today straight away.

Why: The next shift needs to know she went to the door, at what time, and what settled her. A walk nobody records is a walk that happens again at midnight with nobody watching.

Hana (caregiver)

あとで また 声(こえ)を かけますね。

I'll come and speak to you again later.

Why: Say when you will be back. A resident who expects you stops needing to go looking — most of the walking starts as looking for somebody.
