Repositioning — Turning on Schedule to Prevent Pressure Sores — Scenario Dialogue

Can-do: Turn a resident who cannot turn herself: say what you are about to do before you touch her, move her from her back onto her side, pack the new position with a pillow and a cushion, then check the skin you just uncovered.

1・Dialogue & Why — 会話

Hana
(caregiver)

たなか      たいい      か
田中さん、体位を変えましょうか。

Tanaka-san, shall we change your position?

Why: Ask, even when she cannot turn herself. A body that cannot move is still her body, and the question is what makes the next two minutes something you do together.

Tanaka-san
(resident)

ええ、<sup>ねが</sup>お願いします。

Yes, please.

Why: Wait for this. If it does not come, ask again — never turn someone who has not answered you.

Hana
(caregiver)

おな      し      せい      なが      ところ
同じ姿勢が長いと床ずれになります。

Staying in one position too long causes pressure sores.

Why: THE RULE OF THIS EPISODE. Skin pressed between bone and mattress loses its blood supply in roughly two hours. Say the reason out loud — a resident who knows why the turning matters stops treating it as an interruption.

Tanaka-san
(resident)

いま      あおむ
今は仰向けですね。

I'm on my back at the moment.

Why: She names the position she is in. Use her word back to her so you both mean the same thing.

Hana
(caregiver)

はい。<sup>よこむ</sup>横向きになりましょうか。

Yes. Shall we turn you onto your side?

Why: Name the position you are going to, not just the fact of moving. <sup>よこむ</sup>横向き tells her which way to help you, and it is the word the care record uses.

Tanaka-san
(resident)

せなか      すこ      いた
背中が少し痛いです。

My back hurts a little.

Why: Pain in the part that has been under her weight is exactly what you are turning her for. Do not brush it away — it tells you where to look in a moment.

Hana
(caregiver)

ゆっくりで <sup>だいじょうぶ</sup>大丈夫ですよ。

There's no rush.

Why: Ep 19's sentence, doing the same work here. A person who expects to be moved quickly tenses, and a tense body is heavier and easier to hurt.

Hana
(caregiver)

<sup>うご</sup>動かす まえに、かならず <sup>こえ</sup>声を かけます。

I always speak to you before I move you.

Why: An unannounced turn is the one that frightens people. <sup>こえ</sup>声を かける — literally to put a voice on someone — is the standard phrase in every Japanese facility for this, and it is one short sentence before your hands do anything.

Hana
(caregiver)

<sup>まくら</sup>枕と <sup>い</sup>クッションを 入れますね。

I'll tuck a pillow and a cushion in.

Why: The turn is only half the job. Without packing, she rolls flat again within minutes and the same skin takes the weight — the cushion is what makes the new position last.

Tanaka-san
(resident)

これで <sup>き も</sup>気持ちがいいです。

That feels good now.

Why: Your confirmation that the packing sits right. If it does not come, take the cushion out and place it again rather than leaving her to settle.

Hana
(caregiver)

<sup>せ な か</sup>背中 <sup>ひ ふ</sup>の 皮膚 <sup>かくにん</sup>を確認しますね。

I'll check the skin on your back.

Why: The moment after the turn is the only time that skin is visible. Look at it every single turn — this is the check that catches a sore while it is still just a red patch.

Hana
(caregiver)

<sup>あか</sup>赤い <sup>ほうこく</sup>ところが あったら、すぐ 報告します。

If there's a red patch, I report it straight away.

Why: Redness that does not fade is stage one of a pressure sore, and it is a nurse's call, not yours. Report it the same shift — by tomorrow the skin may already be broken.

Tanaka-san
(resident)

ありがとう。 <sup>あんしん</sup>安心しました。

Thank you. That's a relief.

Why: <sup>あんしん</sup>安心しました is what you are actually working for. Someone who cannot move herself is trusting you to come back — say when you will.

またあとで向きを変えに来ますね。

I'll come back later to turn you again.

Why: Repositioning is on a schedule, not on request — she cannot call you by turning over. Saying you will return is how she knows the next turn is already yours to remember.
